

The American Indian Language Development Institute

31st Annual Summer Institute
June 7—June 23 , 2010
The University of Arizona

“Ancestral Voices: Transitioning into Today’s Technology”

Please plan to join us for our annual American Indian Language Development Institute (AILDI) at the University of Arizona. AILDI 2010 will be an exciting and intensive two weeks offering classes & special lectures on the integration of Indigenous knowledge, language, and science and technology. Other courses will include Indigenous language immersion methods & application, linguistics for Native American communities with curriculum and materials development a component of all AILDI courses. AILDI continues its tradition of providing a holistic experience for its participants with local culture, and opportunities to engage in nearby Native American community activities.

AILDI’s mission is to mobilize efforts to document, revitalize and promote Indigenous languages, reinforcing the processes of intergenerational language transfer. AILDI plays a critical role in ongoing outreach, training and collaborative partnerships with educators, schools and Indigenous communities nationally and internationally through the use of multiple resources.
